The successful candidate will have a strong publication record of monographs and top-tier international peer reviewed articles, or the proven potential of producing them in the coming two years. We are especially, but not exclusively, interested in candidates whose research addresses the role of emerging technologies such as social media in campaigns and elections; and/or who are working with advanced methods in statistical or experimental analysis.

Candidates will be asked to teach courses in Public Opinion, Political Communication, Research Methods, and Statistics and Forecasting; and should show acumen for innovative, applied teaching methods focused on critical thinking and problem solving.

Beyond these traditional academic criteria, we seek academics with the capacity to engage in meaningful and policy relevant work, and to participate in contemporary policy debates. As well, we seek faculty members to be institution-builders: to apply for research grants, participate in affiliated research centers and academic programs, and expand IE's current network and partnerships.

Applications should include a cover letter and vita, 1-2 current research papers (including the job-market paper), three academic references, a 1-page statement of teaching philosophy, and evidence of teaching excellence (e.g., teaching evaluations). A PhD degree from a recognized department of Political Science or Public Policy is required. Entry-level ABD candidates must demonstrate clear evidence that the PhD will be complete by July, 2018. Send applications with the subheading Campaigns and Public Opinion to IESIR1@ie.edu
