In today’s world, consumers are constantly receiving multiple messages. No matter in which direction we turn, an ad is trying to sell us something: from a new political party to an up and coming social media platform; from the hottest Netflix series to a jeans brand. You name it… Thousands of messages blur our vision as audiences and consumers are more resilient to such messages. Engaging audiences and understanding the brand customer journey in a world of clutter is one of the greatest challenges for the current generation of Marketing Communication professionals. Behavioral science is critical to understanding why humans react to certain messages the way that they do and the optimal way to influence change in consumer behavior. Getting a message across in the world of content saturation and being able to engage in a conversation with audiences will be the central theme of the “Marketing Communication and Behavior” summer course.

As the globalization of the world economy erodes national borders, people and countries are more interconnected and interdependent than ever. The world is currently experiencing a moment of unprecedented change, accelerated by advances in technology and artificial intelligence. Terrorism, pandemics, climate change, poverty, human rights violations, financial crises, and migration are all global challenges that no state alone can address independently. These issues present multiple economic, political and legal dimensions that are intertwined and can only be solved together. This track will explore how all stakeholders, whether governments, multinational corporations, or civil society must cooperate in order to overcome the global challenges of the 21st century.

*All the core courses are taught in English.

“In Madrid there’s always something happening: whether it is academic or not, you never get bored in this city”.

WHY I LOVE MADRID

Madrid is modern, cosmopolitan, and majestic. The city stands out in the world as one of the top capitals of art. El Retiro Park is perfect for running—a peaceful oasis in the heart of a vibrant metropolis. Its wonderful architecture can be experienced by simply strolling around the city. Visitors are enchanted by the contrast of the perfectly symmetrical Plaza Mayor and the fantastic modernist buildings on Gran Via. The Salamanca neighborhood specifically is full of apartment buildings that are masterpieces of design. In Madrid, there’s always something happening: whether academic or otherwise, it’s impossible to get bored in this city.
There’s never a dull moment. The community is small and you are always meeting friends around the city”.

WHY I LOVE SEGOVIA

In Segovia, the community is small and thrives on helping each other. Rather than massive social circles and a big city, you get a tight-knit community where everybody gets along and learns about themselves and each other along the way. It’s incredible walking around campus, hearing all kinds of languages and meeting people from different cultures and points of view. Everyone is so unique, which makes the university unique as well. There’s never a dull moment.
